A CURE FOR CANCER

Nearly a year ago Mr. H. V. McMickle brought the following to the News and requested its publication for the good that it might do to suffering humanity. He stated that it was a positive cure for cancer, and by reason of the fact that he has had so many calls for it recently shows that those who read the article failed to keep it, and hence The News again gives it space, with the admonition to all to cut it out and file away in the old family Bible, the scrap book or in some other convenient place where it may be found conviently. It may prove invaluable to some member of your own family or some of your neighbors, and is well worth keeping. Following is the remedy:

This remedy should not be used until a most careful preparation of the system has been affected. To use the common expression, the blood must be cleansed. At least two weeks must be taken to accomplish this. In order to cleanse the blood the patient must diet himself or herself, eat but two meals a day, consisting of light, easily digested articles such as rice, oatmeal or other grain foods, and also sweet milk diet may be used, and any fruits that digest easily can be taken. But meat diets, especially hog meat, must be left off, with all rich, greasy foods. Two meals a day during the two weeks' preparatory treatment are better than three, and should be eaten at 10 a. m. and 4 p. m. On arising each morning drink one pint of water as hot as can be taken. This will wash the stomach out and cleanse it from any mucus or impure matter that may have accumulated during the night, thereby preparing it for a clean, healthy digestion, which has much to do in making and keeping the blood pure. In addition to this the best blood purifier that can be used is an infusion made by steeping the roots of stillinga (commonly known as queen's delight) on a slow fire for an hour (it must not boil) in a closed earthern or porcelain vessel. Take a saucerful of this tea,warm, three times each day after meals, when three meals are eaten, are he dir ections. Whiskey, beer and all kinds of ardent spirits must be entirely left off during the treatment, and better for all time, if you do not wish to encourage the retnrn of the cancer.

Now follows the remedy: Take powdered blood root, powdered galangal root and chloride of zinc, of each one ounce. Mix all together well till it is the thickness of a salve. Then add three grains of morphine, working it in well with the mixture. Then if too thin work into this mixture flour until it works like rubber. Then put into a big- mouthed bottle to preserve, ready for use. Cut out a small piece of this salve, spread it on an old piece of clean muslin, so that it will cover the cancer (that is, the salve should be just the size of the canser) and press it down so it will adhere or stick closely to every part of the cancer. Let it remain twelve hours, take it off, and if the cancer does not come off with it, or is loose so it comes out easly, put on a second plaster, let it remain for twelve hours, then remove it, and if there is a white rim all around the edges of the cancer it is killed and will come out. But if it hangs on at any place to flash, better let the plaster remain six or eight hours longer, which will doubtless locsen it up entirely so it can be easly removed, as no harm can result from it. After its removal keep the place thoroughly cleansed with warm water and castile soap, removing all matter at each dressing, morning and night. Dry thorough after each washing and apply talcum powder freely, fully covering the sore, till it is healed. Use only the very best tacum powder. All the medicines above mentioned, the powdered blood root, powdered galangal root, chloride of zinc and stillingir root (this not to be powered) can be obtained from any wholesale drug house through your druggest at a very small expense. Better have him compound it, also.

CRACKS AT THE CROWD

Looking toward the past there is nothing more pleasant to us than the memory of our school days. Even now we feel a thrill of delight as we recall the times when we took up our clean books and started home on Friday evenings. That night we would not have to study. The next morning we could sleep as late as we pleased. The world seemed bright and we were happy. And Saturday morning we played with a light heart. Saturday afternoon and all of Sunday was before us. When night came we still were cheerful, but not so much so as we were the night before. Then another morning dawned, and as we put on our clean clothes we thought of the Sunday dinner. Finally, that dinner was ready. Our appetite, as we now call, was good. We ate enough without being urged, and then we went out to play. But it was not the lively, week-day play. It was quiet, noiseless play, such as is calculated to give a boy the blues. The evening came with its cold supper, and we were reminded that we had not studied our lessons for the next day. It always will be a source of joy to think of our school days—of that portion of them between Friday evening at 4 o'clock and Sunday noon.

The government spends $2,000,000 a year for twine, and the department is urging post masters to be economical. While we dislike to cut prices for this class of work, if the administration will give us a postoffice we'll furnish our own twine.

HE WANTED TO BE RIGHT

Buffalo Jones was telling an after-dinner story. "Pete had charge of the animal tent, and among his pets was a leopard, the only one with the show. He was a bad leopard, too and gave Pete far more trouble than all the rest of the menagerie together. One day, when the show was in New Jersey, I went out to Chicago to arrange some business, While I was having dinner a telegram was handed me. It read: 'The leopard has escaped Prowling about the town. What shall I do? Pete.

Pete was one of those fellows who had to have explicit directions to do anything, even in an emergency. He was always afraid of making a mistake. I rushed from the table and sent a reply.

"Shoot him on the spot,' I wired. Being unusal busy, I forgot all about the affair until about two hours later, when I returned to the hotel, and another telegram was handed me. It proved to be from careful, conscientious Pete, and asked:

"Which spot?' "—Exchange.

A good story is told by a liverpool officer back from France. In the rear of the British lines a concert was being given for the entertainment of the Tommies. Among the contributors was a soldier who purported to be a piper, but whose performances inevitably invited a challenge. He was vigorotsly hooted by a section of the audience, and amid the din a raucous voice rang out:

"send that——fool away!"

The unkind aspersion, coupled with the violenceof the language, moved one of the army chaplains, who was "running the concert, to protest. He asked who had insulted the piper. There was no response. He persisted, "I want to know who called the piper a —— fool,"

A momentary silence was broken when a burly Irisman rose fron his seat and said: "And what I want to know is who called the —— fool a piper?"—Exchange.

GOOD ADVICE TO FARMERS

The South fed herself in 1915 and as aconsequence produced a small cotton crop which sold at satisfactory prices. A big crop the year before sold at poor prices, and without feed or food put Texas in the hole. We had the same war in 1914 as in 1915, and we are likely to have it for a year longer. The difference in results is the difference between food-feed-cotton farming and all-cotton farming.

The man who relies upon all-cotton farming in 1916 is speculating on weather, bollwevil and war. That's a desperate chance. The man who relies upon food and feed crops for his sustenance and makes cotton his surplus will have something for paying debts, or for accumulation, whether cotton sells for 15 cents or 5 cents.

The cotton crop of 1915 was fully five million bales less than the crop of 1914, and it proved to be all that the world would buy at profitable prices. If the war continues there will not be demand for any more cotton than was produced in 1915, even if the war ends, the exhaustion of Europe will be so complete that the spinning industry will not become normal for many months.

Food-feed-cotton farming is Safe Farming.

All-cotton farming is a gamble.

Don't gamble.

Luling, Dec. 20.—A new experiment which is said to retard early blooming of fruit trees will be tried out here next spring according to fruit growers in this section.

The plan is to pack a quantity of ice around the roots of fruit trees in the early spring and in this way delay early blooming and thus save a large amount of fruit from the late accustomed cold snaps, which have always been a bane to fruit producers in this section.

It is thought the new plan will prove successful.

I desire to thank one and all for your patronage and friendship during the past year and wish you a prosperious and happy New Year, and if you will call on me I can show you some extra good bargains in many articles.

A Quick Conversion

By F. A. MITCHEL

I selected the last two weeks in August for my vacation. I am what is called a new woman—that is, I have departed from the ways of those women who sit and hold their hands, waiting for some man to come and marry them.

Until that summer, when I went to the seacoast, I thought that I had no romance in my nature. I was extremely practical and had no sympathy with any one who was anything else than practical. I felt quite competent to make my own living and scorned to relinquish the work to any man.

Nevertheless in all our natures there is the germ of romance. I first discovered this germ in me on that visit to the seashore, and, having discovered it, it grew up like a mushroom.

One evening I went down to the beach to plan some school work, for I was a teacher, and walked over a narrow strip of sand to some rocks a couple of hundred feet from the shore. Arrived there, I found a convenient natural seat and began my planning.

The moon was full, and presently I saw a glimmer of light on the watery horizon. Then the bright upper edge of the moon showed itself, and lastly the round disk stood upon the ocean. It was at this moment that I became conscious of the germ of romance within me. I forgot my work and drank in the beautiful scene—the shimmer on the water, the gilded wave crests. The starry heavens seemed to invite me to their infinite depths; the splash of the waves lulled me.

For a long while I sat enraptured by the beautiful scene. The sounds on the shore, a babel of voices, dance music in the hotels, an occasional burst of laughter, formed a pleasing background for the ocean, the moon, the heavens. Gradually the sounds became confused, the splash of waves sank into a rustle, and I fell into a slumber.

This birth of romance within me, the first romantic fervor I ever experienced, was followed by an awakening of another kind. Something cold struck my ankles, and, starting up, I saw a wave receding from my feet. All about me was the ocean. I looked toward the beach and saw that the strip of sand over which I had reached the rock had disappeared, and the water there, so far as I could see, was as deep as that before me.

This second awakening that I have spoken of was not from slumber; it was the coming of a sense of weakness. There must be an inherent feeling of dependence lying dormant in the breast of every woman however she scorns the stronger sex. At any rate, the first mental impulse that came to me on looking over those merciless waters was for some man to come and rescue me.

I could not swim a stroke. There was no boat, not even a stick of timber, near me. The sounds on the shore had ceased, the lights in the hotels were few. My voice was not strong enough to make myself heard, for I must have been a quarter of a mile from the houses lining the beach, and the waves, now stronger with the flood tide, would drown my voice.

Oh, how I longed for a man—a strong man, a brave man—to rescue me!

I had spoken at women's gatherings, stating that there was no situation a woman might enter upon that she could not extricate herself without a man's help if she would only use her brains. What use was my brain in those watery surroundings? The few square yards of rock on which I stood would soon be covered. Next I would be washed off it by the force of the waves and at last a lingering agony, ended by death.

From one of the houses on the shore emerged a spark. It was a lighted cigar. I had always hated tobacco, but now I would give worlds if that cigar would bring the man who smoked it to save me. I called, but my voice did not reach him. He walked away; then turned and came slowly in my direction.

I took off my white petticoat and waved it as a signal of distress. He saw it and came running toward me. At the verge he stopped and looked about him, evidently for a boat. Seeing none, he threw off his coat and vest, for there was no time to waste. Then, divesting himself of his shoes, he walked toward me till the water was up to his chin; then began to swim. When he reached me I wound my arms about him so tightly that, strong as he was, he found difficulty in loosening them. Then putting an arm under one of mine he drew me into the water and swam with me to the shore.

This task was a difficult one, for so frightened was I that I kept clutching him and impeding his movements. At last, in order to save both of us from drowning, he struck me on the forehead with his clinched fist to stun me. He only partly succeeded in rendering me unconscious, but I was thankful for the blow, for it made me oblivious to the danger. I remained passive, and he succeeded in getting me to the beach.

As he dragged me from the water and was laying me on the sand I regained sufficient consciousness to wind my arms around him again. He is now my husband and I am glad to acknowledge my dependence on him

THE HOG A REVENUE PRODUCER

Pork and Its Products Increasing in Demand.

The razor-back hog has been forced by the thoroughbreds to flee to the mountains and the distance they have traveled each year is measured and recorded by the judges of the Ft. Worth Fat Stock Show. For eighteen years the National Feeders' and Breeders' have held the tape line of progress on this industry and the exhibits on November 22-28 promise to more nearly approach perfection and extend through a much wider range of breeds than any previous exhibits.

No other animal ever made such concessions to the market as has the hog. He has given half his life to meet the demand for young stock and has surrendered the freedom of forests for the shackles of the pen where fat can be produced with the greatest ecenomy. The human race has made no such sacrifices for success as has this dumb brute.

The new hog has become so popular with the housewife that we consume all of our home production and ship in $24,00,000 of pork and its products per annum. He is one of the best revenue producers in the animal kingdom, and has shown an increase in value per head during the past five years of $2.80. The statistics of the Federal Department of Agriculture pay a glowing tribute to the growing popularity of the Texas hog, and show a decrease of approximately a million head in number and an increase of over $2,000,000 in aggregate value. We are traveling rapidly on the road of extermination of the swine industry in Texas, and the National Breeders' will make an exhibit at the Fat Stock Show that will seek to turn the tide. It is one of the missions of the management to balance production and consumption, and no more effective methods can be employed to encourage hog raising than to exhibit the leaders of the swine family to the farmers of Texas.

King Cotton has had the audacity to counterfeit some of the by-products of the hog, but Uncle Sam caught him in the act and passed a pure food law and the subjects of the king are now compelled to march under their own flag and parade under their own colors.

TEXAS FACTS

POPULATION.

There are 365,000 persons who were born in Texas and who reside in other States, while 830,000 persons born in other States live in Texas.

The center of Texas population is 5 miles Northwest of Waco, in McLennan county.

If all the people in the United States moved to Texas, our population per square mile would not exceed that of Massachusetts.

If Texas were as densely settled as the average State in the Union, we would have 8,000,000 instead of 4,500,000 people.

After taking three bottles of Cardui, I began to feel like a new woman. I soon gained 35 pounds, and now, I do all my housework, as well as run a big water mill.
