TOMMY BURROUS HOLDS CALF
FOR ROBIN BURROUS —4-H

Showing a calf not an easy task

There are three important tasks that the calf manager must keep in mind during the actual showing of the calf. One is to get the calf in position. Secondly, the hair must be kept in place. Last of all, the manager has to watch the judge. Often it seems as though all three must be done at the same time.

The following is a list of "things to remember" as compiled by the County Extension Office:

1. Watch the judge and ring stewards for instruction.
2. Keep a leg squarely under each corner.
3. Keep the head and back up.
4. Always walk forward when leading and be prepared to stop before running into the calf in front of you.
5. Don't bend the calf in sharp turns, make a circle.
6. Show when the judge is looking, dress when he is not.

Don't overshow! Present your animal -- not yourself.

8. Appear neat and attractive yourself; be courteous.
9. The show is never over until the judge finishes. Even then, if you placed first, the judge may be sizing you up for champion.

Even with these pointers, the Extension Office says that there is no magic formula for success in competing in junior beef cattle shows. A top champion is a combination of outstanding genetic potential, sound nutrition and care, skillful fitting and showing, plain old hard work and a lot of luck.

Breeding, feeding, management is the key to success.

There is an old saying that every calf would place higher in the show ring if he just had better breeding, feeding and management. Perhaps preparation for the show ring could be considered part of "management." At any rate, exercise, washing, brushing, combing, trimming, clipping, dressing and showing are certainly important in competing. This is particularly true when the competition is tough and close.

Exercising, washing, brushing and combing, trimming and clipping are features of the entire feeding period, as preparation begins months before the show.

It used to be said that good show calves should be led a mile a day, but a shorter period of more intense exercise is probably more benificial to the animal. Groups of calves with access to enough space usually exercise quite a bit on their own. If not, they can be run. Managers are warned not to overdo the exercise, however, espescially in warm weather. Leading is important in traing for the show ring.

Exercis is important in stimulating appetite, maintaining muscle tone and conditioning. Poorly conditioned animals cannot withstand the rigors of hauling, standing, walking and showing.

In classes with large numbers of entries, an animal is required to stand or walk for several hours and he must be readied for such an ordeal.

Washing, brushing and combing are other items of preparation which should begin well before show time. Regular washing allows hair to be brushed and combed more easily and effectively. Diligent, long-term brushing and combing were once absolutly required to train the hair to stand up and stay in place. This well-trained coat was then oiled to make it shine and that was about the extent of hair dressing. Today, however, the widespread use of various creams, sprays, lotions, waxes and other preparations has minimized the necessity for brushing and combing. Even so, clean hair which has been regularly brushed and combed is easier to prepare for show. Brushing and combing also aid a great deal in gentling animals.

Animals should be washed every two weeks beginning no less than two months before show. Non-irritating soap is used and the underline and flanks need to be just as clean as the back of the animal. Rinsing is done with a vinegar solution. Tail switches need treatment with a cream rinse.

Hoof care should also be a regular feature of the entire feeding period. Frequency and extent of hoof trimming varies, depending primarily on the conditions where the animal is kept.Hoof trimming is made easier by the use of a tilt table, but some means of retraining the animal is a must. Hooves are both shortened and leveled on the soles. This is usually done with rasps, hoof nippers and/or an electric sander. Feet should absolutely not be trimmed any later than one week before show and a two week interval is preferred.

Final preparation begins about one week before show day. At this time, the head, tail, underline, throat and brisket are closely clipped. Large-animal electric clippers with regular hair cutting blades are usually used. A week is allowed between this preparation and show day since closely clipped hair needs some growth to appear natural.

Also one week before show, the calf body is "roughed-in," if it has not already been done. This involves clipping the entire body to achieve a smooth appearance. Some people call this practice blocking or shaping. Hair is left long where thickness and fullness are desired, particularly on the lower sides of heavy-middled animals. In general, hair is clipped in the same direction that it was brushed and combed. Ideally blocked at least three times; an initial "roughing-in," again a day or two before the show and a final touch-up on the day of the show.

A casual observer of a show may not realize the work which lies behind it, but the calf managers do and, more importantly, the judges notice.

Dressing the calf a critical step

Of all the last minute details a calf manager must attend to on show day, dressing the calf is one of the most critical.

Estimating the exact showing time is important since the timing of everything done to prepare for showing is critical.

Calves should receive no water on the day of the show until leaving for the ring and should be fed no nearer than two to three hours before show time. Some calves have a tendancy to bloat as a result of all the commotion of final preparation. If the calf has a tendancy to bloat, he is drenched with six to eight ounces of mineral oil one hour before showing.

Dressing requires 45 minutes to an hour if done by one or two persons. Four persons reduce the time to about 20 or 30 minutes. This does not allow for any hair blocking except except possibly a slight touch-up of a few spots.

Dressing is begun by cleaning the hair thorourghly. Calves are washed soon after their arrival at the show. Cleaning is done by blowing out all the loose dirt and then rubbing the hair with alcohol soaked rags.

The first item of the actual dressing is "boning up" the legs with saddle soap. The soap is rubbed down over the hair on the legs and combed up with a Scotch comb. There is some variation in how high the animal is boned, but generally they are boned up at least as high as the underline. Boning adds a professional look to the calf for which the judges are always looking.

The next step is the preparation of the tail switch. Tails are first combed out to remove snarls and tangles. After the combing, the switch is tied up to the unclipped part of the tail shaft. This is followed by back-combing or "ratting" to the desired shape, which is a tight ball. The higher the switch, the more altitude the calf will appear to have. The completed switch is then sprayed again to help hold the shape.

Following preparation of the switch, the hair on the body is dressed. Dressing is generally done with grooming cream. The dressing material is applied to the hair and then combed until all of the cream is worked into the hair and the coat is set.

At some point in the dressing process, the hooves may be sprayed. Showing in deep sand minimizes the necessity for hoof dressing since the hooves may not even be visable. Generally, black paint is used for dark hooves and clear lacquer for light hooves. Some managers, however, prefer to use black paint even on a white animal with light hooves.

As a final step, the animal may be sprayed with a light coat of oil. This is done only if the hair is dull in appearance. The necessity for and the extent of oiling are influenced by the natural shine of the hair, color of the hair and the nature of the dressing materials.

All of the combing, brushing, clipping and dressing has two purposes. One is to make the animal appear as smooth, neat and well-groomed as possible. Another reason is to create a visual impression of the desired length, height and muscling.

Much of what is done today to prepare cattle for show was unheard of ten years ago and these techniques are constantly evolving.

Getting equipped half the battle for prospective calf managers

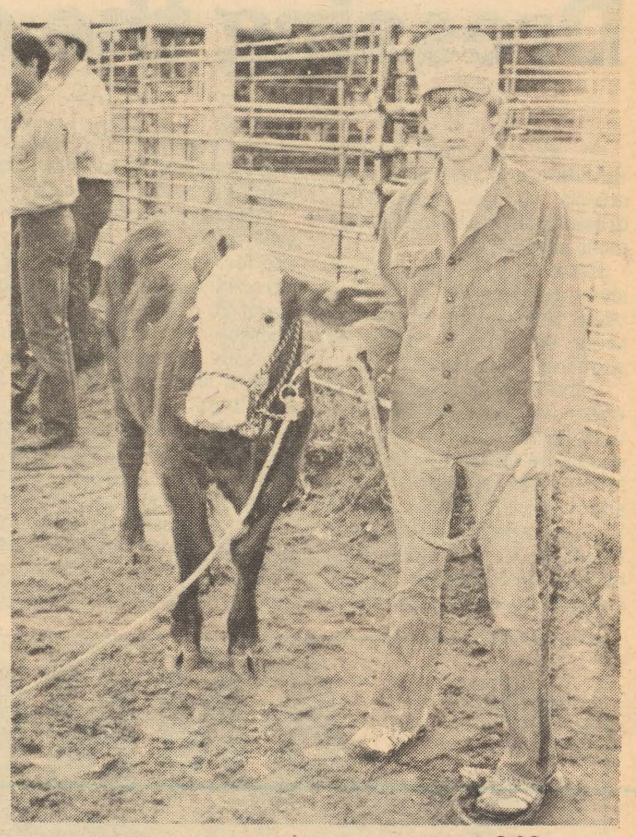

In additon to all the hard work a calf manager must go through to get his calf ready for showing, there is also a great deal of equipment which must be purchased for use in the preparation.

The tack and equipment list issued by the County Extension Office includes show and tie halters, a wash hose, chain and boots, electrical cords and plugs, pliers, screwdrivers, hammers, a pitch-fork, rake and shovel and a fan.

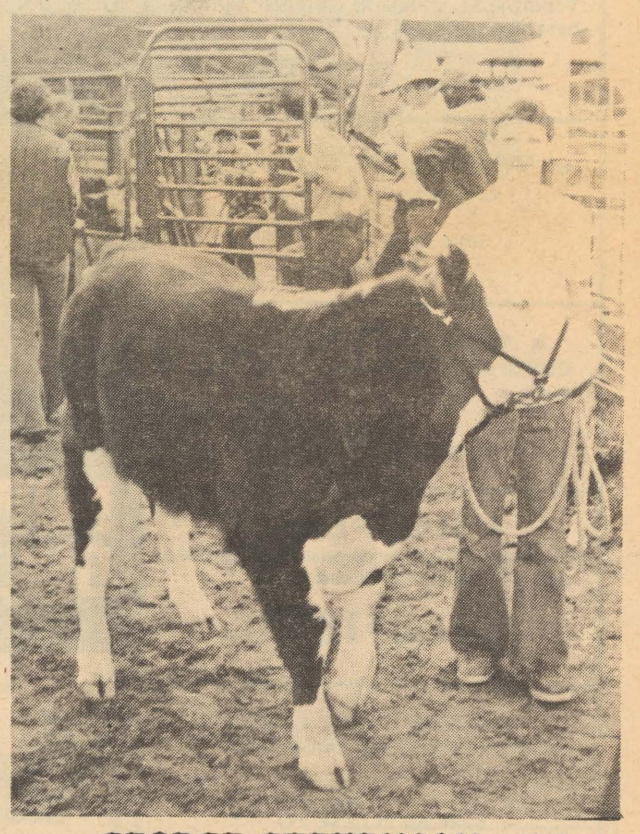

Buckets for feed, water and tack are also a must as is bloat and scour medicine, a drench tube and speculum, drench and bolus guns, nose tongs and a syringe and needles.

Also included in the list is a hair blower/dryer, regular and sheep clippers with extra blades, a show stick, health certificate, rice, root and rubber brushes, three Scotch combs, sand paper, cotton and wool rags, plastic bags, two spray bottles, shampoo, alcohol and coat dressing oil.

Calf managers also need to obtain spray paint, hair spray, concentrated comb-out, saddle soap, colored bar wax, aerosol soap dressing cream and clear plastic paint or liquid spray glue.

Management no easy task

Calf management is no easy task and 4-H and FFA members who manage calves for showing have their work cut out for them. A few of the problems which must be coped with are dehorning, castration, vaccination, external parasites, internal parasites, bloat and scours, warts, ringworms and foot rot.

Calves are dehorned at approximately 3 months of age to obtain well shaped heads and to insure the least possible injury. Fly repellant, coagulant or other wound dressings are normally used on the calves.

Also when the calf reaches about 3 months of age, castration is performed. This necessary operation may cause more hemorrage and wound infection in older calves. The same wound dressings used in dehorning are also used following castration.

Vaccinations are another important fact of calf management which the 4-H'ers and FFA members must contend with. Calves are immunized against blackleg and malignant edema. Local conditions may determine immunization against anthrax, infectious bovine rhinotracheitis, bovine virus diarrhea, parainfluenza or other cattle diseases.

Several wetable powders or emulsifiable concentrate insecticides may abe used to dip or spray beef calves to control such external parasites such as lice, flies, mosquitos and ticks. Spinose ear ticks and grubs are other problems often encountered by the calf manager. The ear ticks can be controlled by sponging or spraying these insecticides into the calf's ear. Grubs are controlled with several systemic insecticides at the proper time as a dip, spray, pour-on or feed additive.

Internal parasites, such as lung and intestinal worms, are not often a problem with calves receiving the amount and type feed recommended. However, if internal parasites are suspected, managers must take a manure sample to a veterinarian for diagnosis and treatment.

Digestive disturbances, such as bloat and scours, may be caused by infections, changes in character, intake of feeds and water or changes in body functions due to environment. When bloat or scours occurs, the manager must reduce feed intake and return to a normal feed intake over a period of several days. Non-infectious scours may be treated by correcting improper feed and/or milk intake, or by pills or liquids containing drugs such as koalin, pectin and electrolytes. Other types of scours may be treated with drugs that have been found to be effective against the specific cause.

Warts may also become a problem to the calf and its manager. Infectious or virus type warts usually grow on the head, neck, shoulders and occasionally on other parts of the body. Commercial wart vaccines may be helpful but are not always effective. Some wart require surgical removal.

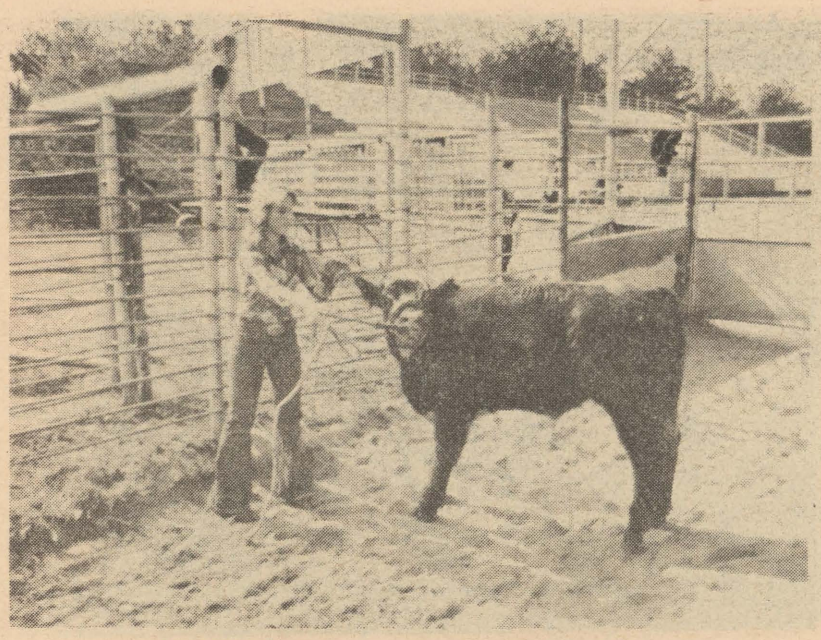

When a calf gets ringworm, the manager must swab the lesions with a seven per cent iodine solution. Veterarians are consulted for other fungicide treatments.

The common organisms causing foot rot do not ordinarily penetrate normal skin. However, injuries caused from mud dried between the toes, hard clods, sharp rocks or an object that will damage the hoof or skin may cause the disease to start. In its earliest stages, foot rot can often be treated by cleaning the infected area thoroughly and applying a seven per cent iodine solution. Success with this treatment depends largely on getting the medicine in contact with all of the infected tissue and keeping the area dry.

In short, caring for a calf requires a great sense of responsibility, knowlege and hard work on the part of the manager, but a blue ribbon at show time makes it all worthwhile.

Housing calf first consideration

One of the first things a person who wants to raise a calf for show must consider is where and how to house and feed the calf. Proper equipment in the feedlot and the management of the calf throughout the feeding period are of prime importance.

A fence is one of the first considerations. Fences should be constructed of materials which permit maximum air flow. Electric fences are highly recommended and net wires are considered good. Wood and barbed wire fences are considered to be the least desirable.

Plenty of air circulation should also be allowed in the calf shed to add to the comfort of the calf in hot weather. Extension Agents say that a 6'x8' shed is ample space for one calf.

Agents also suggest that a 10'x10' brush arbor be constructed to provide shade during the heat of the day. Clean sand under the arbor, moistened twice a day, aids in keeping the calf comfortable .

A good feed trough is also a necessity. Portable type plastic or metal feed pans are popular because they can be kept clean and the same pan can be taken to the show. Structures are usually built around the trough to prevent feed waste and yet allow pan removal for cleaning. Calves should stand at the trough while eating with their front feet about two inches higher than their hind feet. It is advisable to place feeders under the brush arbor; especially during hot weather.

A hay box should be placed on the ground in the shed and should hold only one or two blocks of hay at a time. The box will conserve hay, but should be cleaned daiy. Old hay should be discarded.

Attached to the shed wall should be a mineral box filled with fresh granulated salt to serve as a lick for the calf. Preferably, the box is divided so that other minerals may be fed if needed. Fresh, clean water, some distance from the feed area, should be available to the calf at all times. The calf manager should keep the trough or container clean and at about 68 degrees F. County Agents recommend portable or fountain drinking containers.

The best bedding, according to the Extension Office, is creek sand, if available. Otherwise, straw or some similar material is normally used. As in the other facets of calf management, cleanliness is important.

The feedlot itself should be well drained and sanitary at all times. At least 200 square feet is provided as exercise space for the calf. Fly baits are used for fly control.

In addition to the work the calf manager has to do on the calf itself, one can see that maintaining the calf's feeding and living space is nearly a full-time job in itself.

TAX TIP IF YOU SELL FOR A PROFIT

Normally, taxpayers who sell their home for a substantial profit face a heavy tax load, but this burden can be avoided. If you but another home that costa as much or more than the sales price of the old one, within a specified time, the profit from the sale is not included in your taxable income.

The second home must be bought and occupied within a period ending 18 months after the sale. (This is a new change, previous time period was one year). A 2-year period is permitted when building a new home. This tax deferment applies only to the sale of a home which is the family's main residence.

When figuring the amount of gain for which tax may be postponed you may deduct for "fix-up" expenses if they were accomplushed within 90 days prior to the sale, and paid for no later than 30 days after the sale. Check with your accountant or the IRS on details if this matter affects you. It could be well worth your while.

How about some plain talk on auto loans?

When you try and talk about auto loans, do you feel as if everyone is speaking a foreign language? Do you ask a lot of questions about rates that are important to you, but nothing gets answered? Like, "How much does that interest really amount to?" Or, "What is effective annual yield, anyway?"

At First Bank, you'll get the answers, and something else besides. You'll get an auto loan that doesn't pinch. We'll work with you until you're satisfied. Plain talk. It's an important part of FB&T new car financing. And it's as easy for an First Bank & Trust customer to come by as a phone call. Call First Bank Vice-president Pete Cooney today, at 632-5511. He'll see to it that you get the answers. (He's been giving the right ones for over ten years.)
